Advances in Fertility Control and the Treatment of Sterility: The Proceedings of a Special Symposium held at the XIth World Congress on Fertility and Sterility, Dublin, June 1983

Since human prolactin was isolated and characterized 13 years ago, the study of the control of prolactin secretion has been intensive. Hyperprolactinaemia is the most commonly identifiable hypothalamic pituitary disorder^{1,2}. The dominant inhibitory nature of hypothalamic control of prolactin secretion may be the reason that hyperprolactinaemia is such a common condition. During the past decade two separate therapeutic approaches to the management of hyperprolactinaemia have been introduced: transsphenoidal selective pituitary microsurgery and medical therapy to suppress prolactin secretion with orally active long-acting dopamine agonist drugs. Small prolactin-secreting tumours are treated extremely satisfactorily both with medical and with surgical therapy, both in terms of lowering serum prolactin levels to normal and in restoring gonadal function. However, for the larger tumours, either where the tumour is invasive or the pretreatment serum prolactin level is greater than 1250ng/ml- the results of surgery are poor in terms of restoring to normal circulating prolactin levels and gonadal function. We now discuss the medical management of hyperprolactinaemia, potential problems during pregnancy and the management of large prolactin secreting pituitary tumours.
